

Wound Healing

One-year master's program (MCIsc)

A scientific approach to wound care

Understanding the complexities of many chronic and non-healing wounds can challenge even experienced professionals. Western's Wound Healing master's program provides an advanced education in wound care to health professionals including nurses, chiropodists and physical and occupational therapists.

Experienced health professionals seeking advanced clinical skills in wound care will be able to enhance their clinical practice, and prepare for leadership roles in policy development, research, academia and beyond.

Delivered through a combination of online courses, on-site residency periods and a clinical mentorship, this program helps students develop strategies for life-long learning and skills to apply and share in a variety of health settings.
